The official material was hard to learn from.

It explained the rules, but it did not teach me the basics first.

01

Too much jargon

Terms appeared before I understood what they meant.

02

Expensive help

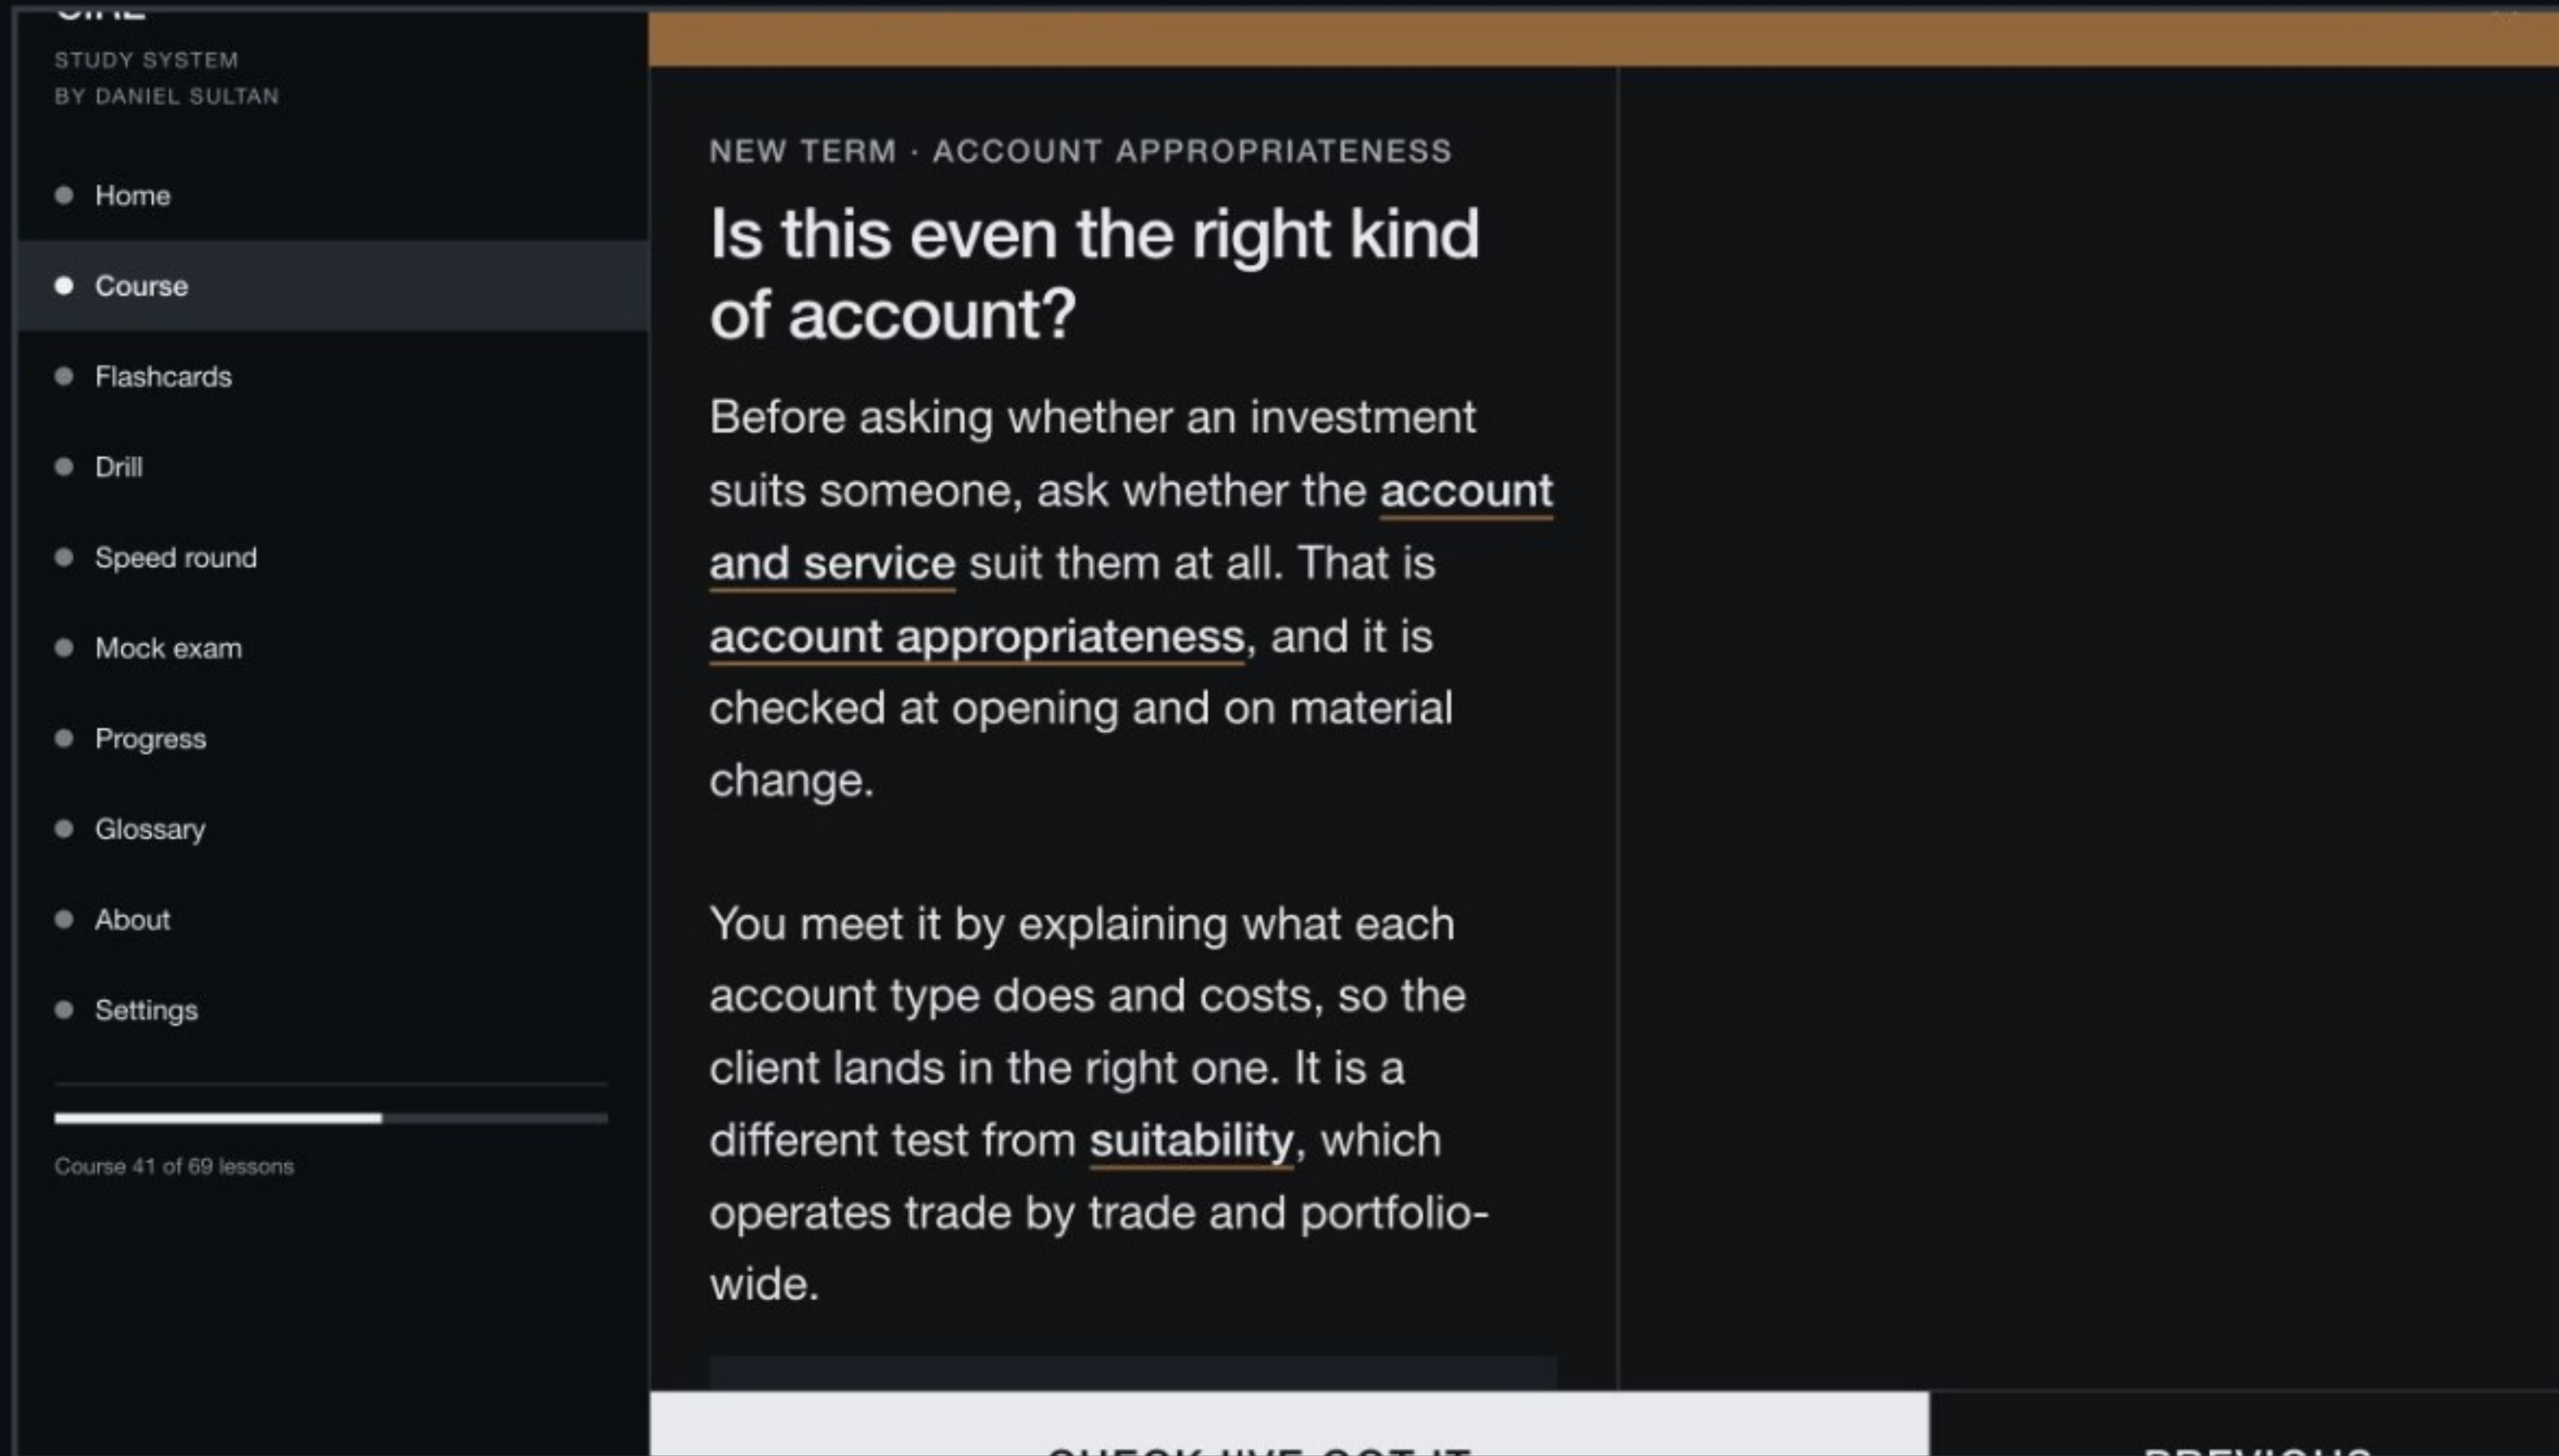

Many easier study options cost money or require an account.

03

Bad practice questions

Some questions test guessing tricks instead of real understanding.

1 E1 · REGULATORY FRAMEWORK

1 1.2 · CIRO

CIRO is the pan-Canadian self-regulatory organization: it oversees Investment Dealers, Mutual Fund Dealers and all trading on Canada's debt and equity marketplaces. It writes two main rule books, the IDPC Rules (how a dealer runs its business and treats clients) and UMIR (how orders and trades must behave in the market).

READ THE COURSE CHAPTER ON THIS →

A IDPC Rules, because they cover conduct by a dealer's employees

B UMIR, because it governs order handling and trading on markets

C National Instrument 45-106, because it governs order flow

D The Bank Act, because dealers are deposit-taking institutions

Designed and built by Daniel Sultan. The course, the wording, the questions and the way it all fits together are mine. The rules themselves come from CIRO, drawing on the (January 2025), the published practice exam and the guide for studying. This is a study aid. Where anything here differs from CIRO's own rules, guidance or syllabus, CIRO is not responsible.

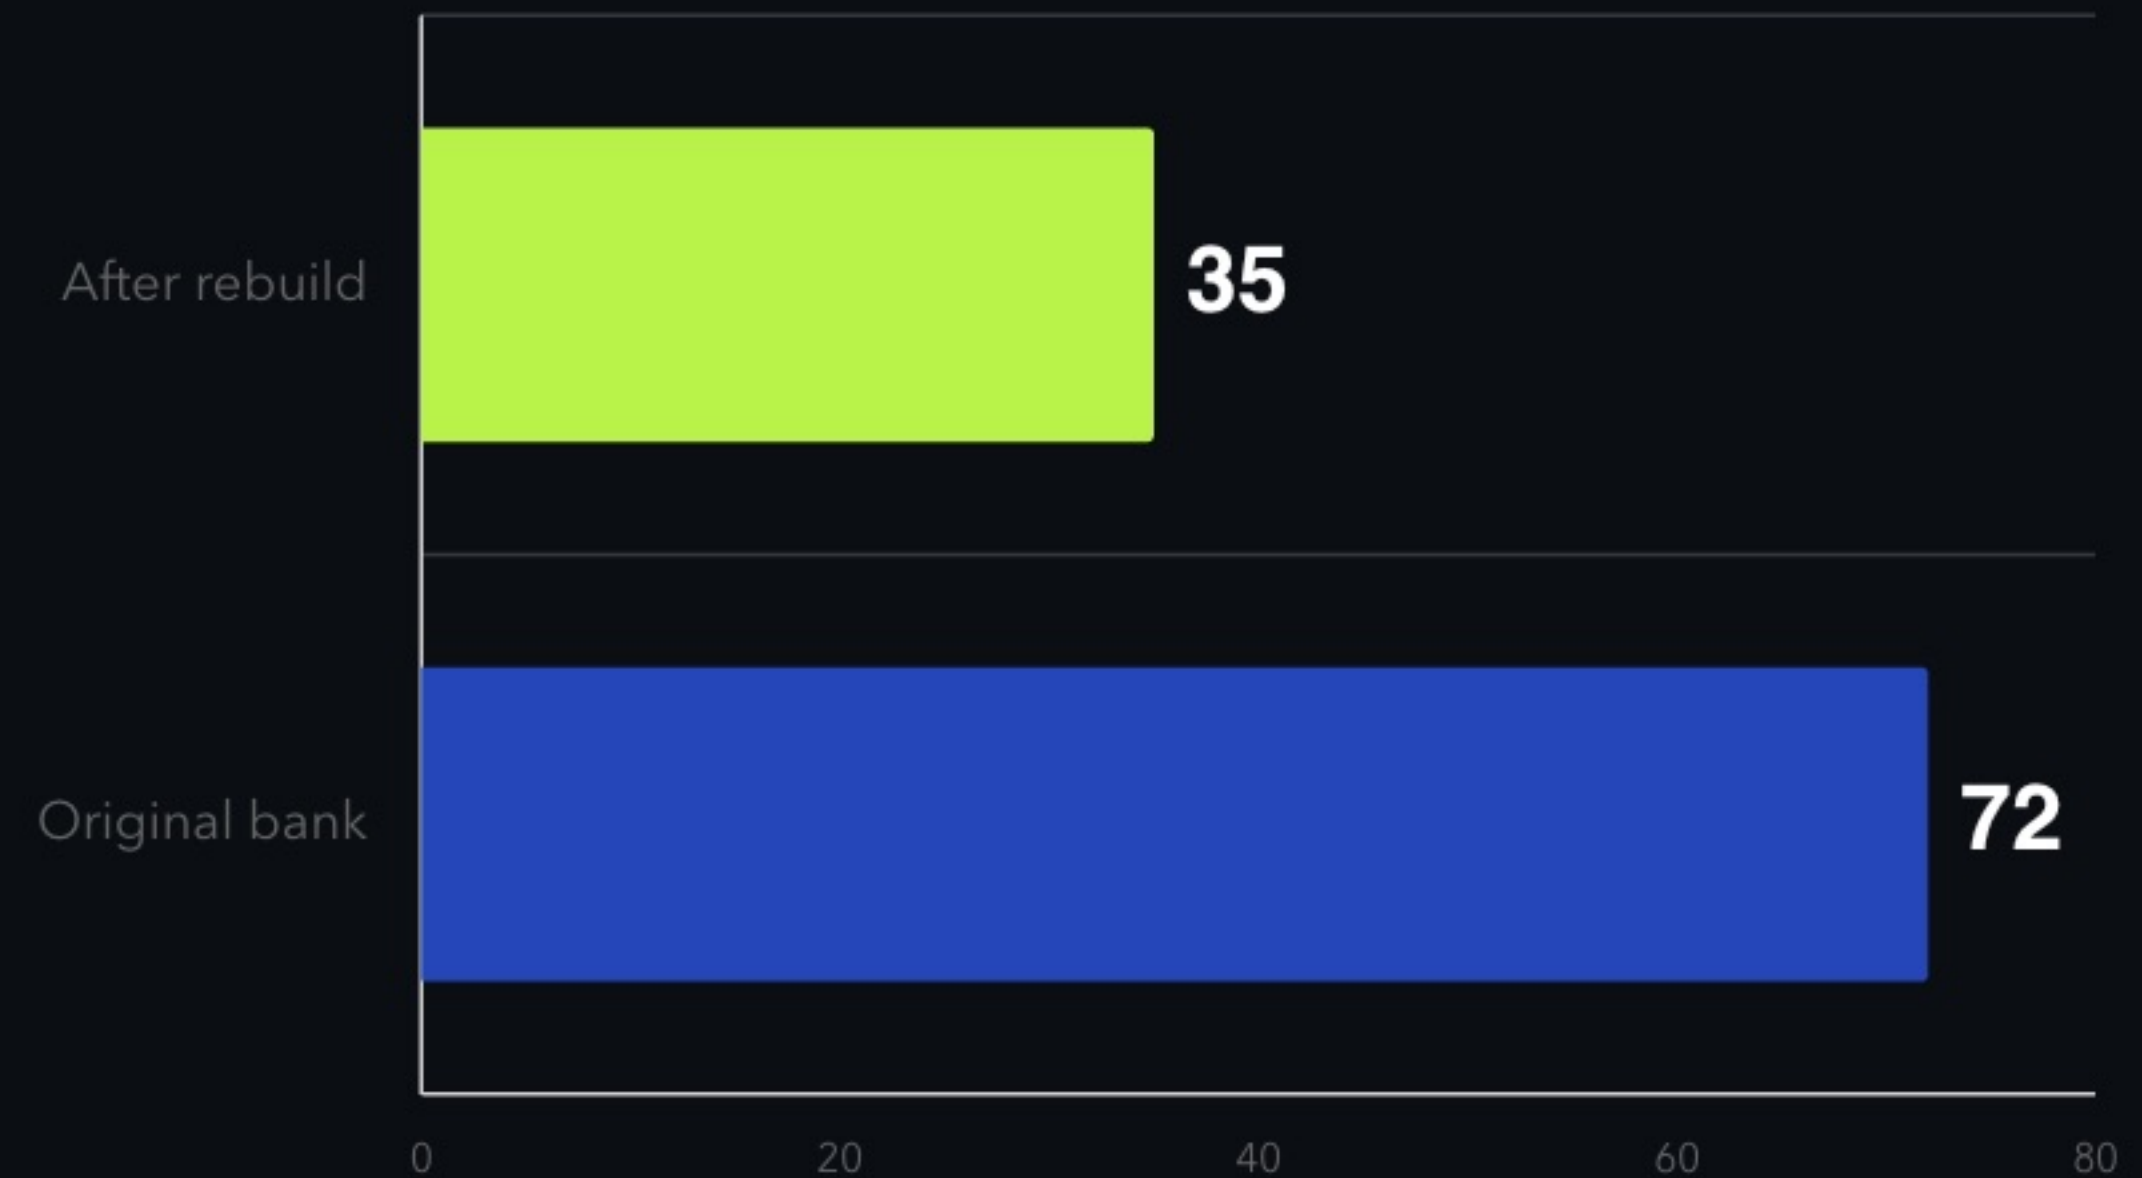

I CHECKED MY OWN WORK

I found a problem in my questions and fixed it.

The correct answer was often the longest choice. That made some questions easier to guess.

WHAT I DID

I rewrote 98 wrong-answer choices. The problem fell from 72% of questions to 35%.

Correct answer was the longest choice

AFTER NINE MONTHS

The current course has expert review and learner testing. The next exam course reaches beta.

I built this because I needed it.

I'm Daniel Sultan, an 18-year-old sole founder in Mississauga. I work in financial sales. While studying for the CIRE, I could not find a free course that started with the basics, so I built InvestmentRegulation.ca myself.

I'm raising C$150,000 for nine months. Qualified reviewers will check the current course. I will improve accessibility and build the next exam course.
